Ready the Troops!

At the start of the Revolutionary War, the Continental Army did not have the same standardization of training as the world's leading armies of the time. In order to have a chance at winning the war, the Americans had to rapidly professionalize their troops. They had help from former European military officers, such as Baron von Steuben, who joined the Continental Army. His training camps provided opportunities for large-scale, intensive training. Other training methods, such as the British "line" method, focused on developing discipline and order over the British
